Dear Dr. Green:

Thank you for the time you recently gave me to speak with you about the benefits of Procardia XL® (nifedipine) Extended Release Tablets GITS. As we discussed, unlike other cardiovascular agents, Procardia XL is distinguished by the unique GITS (Gastrointestinal Therapeutic System) delivery system, which allows for essentially constant delivery of nifedipine over 24 hours, with just one daily dose.

It is important to note that no products are available which have been shown to be bioequivalent to, AB rated, or generically substitutable for Procardia XL. The following are important features of Procardia XL:

- The indications for Procardia XL are hypertension, vasospastic angina, and chronic stable angina.
- The safe and effective dosage range for Procardia XL is 30-mg to 120-mg per day (daily doses above 90-mg in angina have not been studied, and should be used only when clinically warranted). Furthermore, 90% of all prescriptions dispensed are for the starting doses of 30-mg and 60-mg.[1]
- Procardia XL exhibits linear and dose proportional pharmacokinetics, which allow for flexible dosing. For example, three 30-mg Procardia XL tablets may be taken instead of one 90-mg Procardia XL tablet.
- Plasma concentrations of nifedipine delivered by the GITS formulation rise gradually and reach a plateau at approximately six hours post first dose. Relatively constant plasma concentrations are maintained thereafter. Additionally, no evidence of dose dumping has been observed with Procardia XL.
- Procardia XL, because of its two layer "push-pull" mechanism, is unaffected by either pH or gastric motility. Procardia XL may be taken with or without a meal.
- Trough-to-peak ratios are 76%-92% (diastolic) and 72%-100% (systolic) for Procardia XL.
- Procardia XL may be taken in the morning or evening.
- No dosage adjustments because of patient age are required with Procardia XL.
- The overall efficacy and safety of Procardia XL has been shown in over 200 published studies worldwide.
